6 Reasons to Use Future Perfect in English

will have (will've / 'I've) + past participle (3rd form) positive: I will have (will've / 'I've) made lunch by the time you get home.

 negative: I will not have (won't have) made lunch by the time you get home.
 question: Will you have (you've) made lunch by the time I get home? / Yes, I will (have). / No, I won't (have).

1. To talk about actions in the future that will be completed at an undetermined time before another future time:

I think some fans will have left before the end of the match.

Future Perfect is sometimes called 'past in the future' because we use it to imagine both the past and the future:

Future Time 1 (time of completion not specified): Fran will have run five miles.
 Future Time 2: by nine o'clock.

The action in Future Time 1 – run – will be past by the time Future Time 2 occurs. We imagine the past in the future – the completion of an action / time before a later future time. It emphasises the completion of an activity before a deadline. The time when the earlier action will be complete is not specified, because it is either unknown or unimportant. Typical contexts when it is used include:

making appointments: Yes, I will've finished my meeting when you call at twelve. when + verb phrase scheduling travel plans: Jason will have landed at JFK by Tuesday lunchtime. by + time making arrangements: You'll have had lunch, won't you, so let's leave at about two. - [time is known] predicting the weather: It will have stopped raining by then, so we can go for a walk. by then

2. To talk about future schedules:

I won't have had time to read the report until two o'clock. until + time / until then
 Will you have arrived at the office before the boss gets in? before + verb phrase
 All our business partners will have received their information packs by that point. by that point / stage
 On Wednesday the project will have already been delivered to the company. on + day / already Lars will've finished his report as soon as / once you stop distracting him! as soon as / once
 We feel quite sure that your book will've been published by March. by + day / date / month, etc.
 Call me at six, 'cause I will have had my phone off for most of the day. for + time / all...

3. To plan travel arrangements:

If they leave here at nine, the bus will have gone by the time they get there. by the time + verb phrase
 No, the boat won't have sailed at eight o'clock, so you have plenty of time. at + time
 The boys believe they will have reached the mountain top by tomorrow. by tomorrow
 I think the plane will have probably landed in twenty minutes. in + number + minutes, days, etc.
 Yes, Sue believes that, due to the traffic, she won't have got there on time. on time

4. With adverbs and modal verbs of probability:

Dad should have definitely watched the match. definitely Pat could have certainly achieved a good grade in English. certainly Tania might have probably made a cake for the party. probably
 They may have possibly stopped at Waitrose. possibly

5. To give reasons and excuses:

I can't meet you at 5pm because I will have worked from / since early morning. from / since + time
 George won't have got home ill 8.30pm, so he won't be able to play badminton. till + time
